

Dissecting Attorney-Client Privilege & the Work Product Doctrine

From basics to best practices

As volumes of electronic communications and documents grow, so too has the volume of materials subject to protections under the attorney-client privilege and work product doctrines. As legal advice and work product can be shared more easily beyond those with whom the attorneys communicate directly with, how can lawyers and their clients best safeguard these materials? What are the limits of these protections? And what do you do when faced with allegations that the protections have been waived?

Join our experts to discuss the fundamentals of attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine along with these questions about best practices, common pitfalls, and recent developments in the law.
